

Swimming with Whale Sharks

AUSTRALIAN WILDLIFE ADVENTURE

Australia boasts some truly remarkable and indeed unique wildlife and no visit is complete without some form of wildlife encounter. From birdwatching and crocodile-spotting in the Kakadu National Park to walking amongst sealions and finding koalas lazing in trees on Kangaroo Island. You could even head out on a dusk patrol in Tasmania to seek out the elusive Tasmanian Devil. Here, though, we offer you the chance to swim with whale sharks on Ningaloo Reef.

Between the end of March and August each year, the World Heritage Listed Ningaloo Reef Marine Park, which stretches along the north western coastline of Australia for over 161 miles, plays hosts to the world's largest fish: the majestic whale shark. But that's not all, because between May and November the reef also becomes a 'whale highway' as the largest migration of humpback whales on the planet passes through.

Your whale shark experience starts as you board your vessel and head out to the reef. Light aircraft fly overhead locating the whales so you have the best opportunity of swimming with them. During the outward sail there will be a full briefing by the crew and the on-board marine biologist will answer any questions you have about these gentle giants. In this marine rich environment, there's also a chance you'll encounter bottlenose and Australian humpback dolphins and those with a keen eye might also spot dugongs as they surface for air.
