It is quite remarkable to be reporting on a positive 2.4% return for the month of April 2025 – a month that will be remembered for 'Liberation Day'. The policy of the new administration of the United States generated significant angst and volatility. Subsequently, all three constituents of the Financial Transaction Platforms theme are now in the Top 10. These firms are typically agnostic to market levels, thriving instead on volume of activity which tends to rise during periods of high volatility. Not only does the portfolio benefit from the hedging effect during such times, each have corporate activity that add further intrigue:

Alpha FX helps firms trading internationally manage their foreign exchange exposures in a low-risk way. Sharply increased currency volatility emphasises the importance of this. Alpha's approach contrasts sharply with that of rival Argentex which declared itself close to insolvency with shares down over 90% as a result of Liberation Day. In early May, Alpha FX attracted a take-over approach which was rejected as too low. IG Group is a global leading platform for trading contracts-for-difference. Sophisticated investors can place leveraged bets that pay off for predicted downwards moves as well as upward. In recent years, cash-rich IG can be accused of being overly conservative, so our holding was catalysed by the bold appointment of proven business builder Breon Corcoran. He has quickly identified costly areas to shut down and areas to expand into including the acquisition of Freetrade. TP ICAP's customers are major banks, investment firms and corporates dealing in bonds, FX, equities and commodities – all of which experienced elevated trading during April. In recent times the acquired Liquidnet platform has come good after some hard yards, and the next corporate activity is expected to be the partial flotation of the firm's uniquely valuable data business. Packaging the price data from its own activity, peers trade at dramatically higher valuations than the group does now.
